The inspired Paul announced: “When the fullness of the time came, God sent forth his Son” (Gal. 4:4). This remarkable passage reveals that Heaven’s scheme of redemption was unfolded according to a precise program. It was meticulously designed so as to be most advantageous to human reception. Let us briefly consider this matter.

After the initial fall of man (Gen. 3), humankind progressively dredged itself deeper into wickedness. When more than a century of righteous preaching by the godly Noah produced little result, Jehovah sent the great flood to purge the earth (Gen 6-8).

From Noah, several generations later the renowned Abraham was descended, and through him the Hebrew nation was founded – from whom the Messiah eventually would come.

Some four centuries after Abraham, the Lord through Moses gave to the Hebrew family a written revelation called the law of Moses. It was basically designed to accomplish three goals.

It defined sin and sharpened Israel’s awareness of the same. To use Paul’s expression, it made “sin exceeding sinful” (Rom. 7:7, 13).

Additionally, the law was designed to show man that he, by his own merit or effort, could never justify himself. The law thus emphasized man’s need for a justifier – for someone who would come and do for us that which we are unable to do ourselves.

In harmony with that need, the Old Testament law, therefore, pointed the way to the coming Messiah. This was accomplished in a number of ways.
